Solar News:

Full moon is 1 May (at 6:23pm), sometimes referred to as “flower moon”. The Anglo-Saxon’s name was “Milk Moon” from the Old English Rimilcemon. It means three-milkings-month in modern English because cows were milked three times a day during this time of year.

The new moon is 16 May and will be a ‘supermoon’ because the slightly elliptical orbit brings the moon closer to earth and therefore it looks larger (technical name for the closest point is the perigee).

Ashill Group exists in Law

Revd Patrick Morrow

I confess: I do like the poems of Philip Larkin. He flourished in my home city of Hull, where he lived for three decades, but was unkind about it. I forgive him. Here is an extract of one of his powerful poems:

The Trees

The trees are coming into leaf
Like something almost being said;
The recent buds relax and spread,
Their greenness is a kind of grief...

Yet still the unresting castles thresh
In fullgrown thickness every May.
Last year is dead, they seem to say,
Begin afresh, afresh, afresh.

We may have to think about what an “unresting castle” is, and how it would “thresh”, but we can do that (and maybe come to different answers). Overall the poem makes ready sense. The year is new! The year is fresh! That freshness draws us in, and even comes as a command!

I will be blunt: it is easier to resonate with this whole notion, when we live in the countryside. I had to do more work for it to resonate, when I lived in London. I will say, though, that it was still possible.

There is another side to this. Every time we immerse ourselves in the uniqueness of this particular new spring, we ourselves are (guess what?) a year older. As a child, that is great, of course (I remember it). As an adult, well, let's just say there comes a tipping point. There comes a point when the freshness is still lovely, but it feels it has less and less to do with us. That has to be part of why Larkin says: “Their greenness is a kind of grief”. It is well known that Larkin was a man who knew unhappiness, and didn't like ageing, or indeed much change at all. But! But he still managed to sing the praises of spring, and of May, and of trees, all in ways which spoke to others.

I happen to think we can all do something like this. Turn our negatives into positives by, well, yes, making (say) a poem out of them. Families do this, at funerals, week in and week out. I wonder if we can do more of this.

By the way – and this is prose and not poetry – the Ashill Group now exists in law, and I am legally Rector of the Ashill Group, which means the parishes of Ashill, Merton, Ovington, and Saham Toney. I am very happy about this!

This month we are celebrating Pentecost, which in 2026 will be observed on Sunday, 24 May. Many people ask why the date of Pentecost changes each year and how it is determined. The answer is directly connected to Easter, which is explained below.

Pentecost always occurs fifty days after Easter Sunday. This is why its date changes every year. Since Easter itself does not have a fixed date and is based on the lunar calendar, Pentecost also moves each year.

Easter is calculated as the first Sunday after the first full moon following the spring equinox. Once the date of Easter is known, Pentecost is simply counted forward by fifty days. This places Pentecost on a Sunday, seven weeks after Easter.

The name “Pentecost” comes from a Greek word meaning “fiftieth,” reflecting this exact timing.

In the Bible, Pentecost was originally a Jewish feast known as the Feast of Weeks. It was celebrated fifty days after Passover and was associated with the harvest. This explains why many people from different regions were present in Jerusalem (see Acts 2).

For Christians, Pentecost took on a deeper meaning. It became the day when the Holy Spirit came upon the followers of Jesus. This event marked the beginning of the spread of the Christian message. It was not planned by human effort. It began with divine action.

Understanding the date helps place the event in context. Pentecost is not an isolated moment. It follows the resurrection of Jesus and continues the sequence of events that began at Easter. That is why the date changes. This year Pentecost falls on 24 May, but its significance remains the same every year: it reminds believers of the same event recorded in Acts 2. It marks the moment when fear turned into boldness and when a small group became a growing movement.

Don't burn your bras!

Ann Johnson

Calling all Ladies ...

LADIES please don't burn your bras but bring them down to me and support a breast cancer charity. Seriously, all ill fitting and worn-out bras can benefit the breast cancer charity. If the charity receives one ton in weight they will benefit by £750. I shall be taking all the bras to a pre-loved shop in Sheringham in the middle of May, so please leave any unwanted bras in my porch (47 The Street) before 10 May.

Thank you in anticipation.

Ann
